

Online Master Class on Family Violence in Texas Launched by Defense Lawyer

A new online master class dedicated to addressing family violence has been launched in Texas, presented by defense attorney John Helms. The course, which aims to provide valuable insights and resources for understanding and combating family violence, is now accessible to the public via a dedicated platform.

The master class covers various aspects of family violence, including legal implications, support resources, and strategies for prevention. Helms, a seasoned attorney with extensive experience in family law, emphasizes the importance of education and awareness in addressing this pressing social issue.

Participants in the course will gain access to expert guidance on navigating the complexities of family violence cases, including issues of custody, protective orders, and the legal rights of victims. By offering a comprehensive overview of the topic, the master class seeks to empower individuals with knowledge and tools to advocate for themselves and others effectively.

The launch of this initiative comes at a critical time, as family violence remains a significant concern across Texas and the nation. Helms highlights that increasing awareness and understanding of family violence is essential for fostering a safer environment for families and communities at large.

By leveraging online platforms, the master class aims to reach a wider audience, ensuring that vital information is accessible to those who may benefit from it. As the discourse around family violence continues to evolve, initiatives like this serve as an important step toward creating a more informed and supportive society.
